JINGLES AND JESTS

Between Girls.

"Anything good at the theatres next week?"
"Hadn't noticed," said the other girl.
"Why?"
"If there is I'll start a quarrel with Ferdie now, and then he can send me a couple of matinee tickets to square himself."—Kansas City Journal.

Heard Her Think.

"Then, Minnie, you are going to get another physician instead of the old health inspector?"
"Yes, he is too absent minded. Recently he examined me with the stethoscope, he suddenly called out, 'Hello! Who is it?'—Fliedegne Blacketer.

Sam, the Collegian.

Zeke: "Goin' to make any profit much on your summer boarders this year, Hiram?"
Hiram: "Well, I reckon. When the season started I turned 'em over to my boy Sam, jes' back from the agricultural school. I tell you what, Zeke, the more I see what kin be done by goin' about things with business methods the more I finds myself in favor of college education."—St. Louis Republican.

Cash! ! !

"You have made two hundred hearts happy." "Have you such a large family?" inquired the heiress. "I refer to my creditors," said the duke.—Washington Herald.

Horrible.

"Oh, Henry," she said when she had thrown off her wraps and flung herself into a chair. "I'm so mortified."
"What's the matter, dear?"
"I met Mrs. Biggies at the reception this afternoon and she seemed so nice that I stood there before the crowd for half an hour and talked to her. When we were leaving her chauffeur drove up in an old four-cylinder car and after she had taken her seat in it she called out right before everybody that she would expect me to call on her soon."—Chicago Record-Herald.

He Would Fain.

She was French and she bathed in the Seine.
But she met with a silly young Swine; He grinned like an ape.
And he looked at her shape. So she said: "Poo! you give me ze peine!"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

New Topics.

Stranger (returning to the old home town after several years' absence in the city)—Well, well, well, if there isn't old Deacon Trueblood and old Si Hoskins sitting out yonder in front of Lumbos's grocery and still arguing. Haven't those old fellows ever yet settled the question of orthodox baptism? Native—Baptism? They ain't talkin' baptism. Bill, Si's jes' explainin' to the deacon that the deacon would ha' done a darn sight better gittin' an automobile like Si's insid of gittin' the kind of one the deacon did git.—St. Louis Republic.

Disappointed.

"I shan't go in their house again."
"What's the matter? Didn't they ask you to sing?"
"Yes."
"And didn't you?"
"No. When I asked to be excused they merely let it go at that. I supposed, of course, they'd insist on it."—Detroit Free-Press.

He Got His.

"Miss Gladys, can you cook?" inquired the prospective suitor, cautiously.
"I can," she answered sweetly, "but the young man I am engaged to assures me that I won't have to."—Kansas City Journal.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 27, 1913.

President Wilson had more forbearance with Huerta than most men would have had.

Evidently Thaw is a firm believer in reciprocity with Vermont, because he offers us his affections free of charge.

If Thaw doesn't step lively, there is a danger of his losing position on the front page. And that would be a calamity to a man of his stamp!

Having run on about every other party ticket, it is left for the present chief executive of Massachusetts to start a Foss party and run on and over it.

We guess that Mrs. Thomas R. Marshall is a vice president's wife of the accepted pattern, for she has made her 1,000th social call since Tommy told the Senate on March 4 it was wearing blinders.

If the lawyers of Washington county are able to agree on a man to be recommended by them to Governor Fletcher for appointment to the supreme court bench, such an agreement ought to carry considerable weight with the governor.

Brattleboro, like a good many other places, is suffering from a disease which might be called swelling tax rate, due in many instances (if not in Brattleboro) to careless exposure of the system to drafts of large size. The financial surgeon's knife is the only sure remedy.

Frequent accidents are happening in Vermont slate quarries, in which great chunks of slate and dirt tumble into the pit "without warning," as we are always told, and kill one or more men. It would seem to be possible to avert some of these accidents which happen "without warning" by knocking off the overhanging chunks at a time when the workmen were not congregated beneath them. By keeping the overhanging edges back some lives might be spared.

The business-like attitude of Attorney General Rufus E. Brown in the face of the possible thrusting of a New York asylum fugitive onto the state of Vermont is reassuring to the people of the state, who do not desire to have their commonwealth drawn into a noisome mess just because it is believed in some quarters that the fugitive went from Vermont soil onto Canadian land. Moreover, the defiant attitude (it might well be called defiance) of the attorney general, is likely to check to a certain step the plans of getting the fugitive into Vermont, for the official declares he has no doubt that Vermont stands ready at any time to surrender the fugitive to the Mattewan asylum authorities as soon as they should demand him. It is well to let it be known that Vermont is not likely to be a haven of refuge for this person.

THE TENNIS PRIMACY.

From out of the West has come a young man who stands head and shoulders above other Americans who handle the tennis racket on the lined court. He also ranks with the leaders of the world in the sport, having rarely been beaten in the later years of his participation in international competition. The young man is Maurice E. McLoughlin, a marvel of human energy and endurance, and skillful withal. Yesterday at the Newport, R. I., courts he established his pre-eminence over all contenders for the American championship by defeating R. Norris Williams, 2d, in a four set match, in which, while both played brilliantly at times, the advantage was clearly with the Californian. By virtue of that victory, McLoughlin demonstrated beyond question that he is the best exponent of the game in the United States at the present time and also, it may be added, a worthy successor to that great player, William A. Larned, who held the title for many years and who, by the way, is still a capable handler of the racket, although handicapped somewhat by years, as age is reckoned in athletic contests. McLoughlin is a young man, being in the early 20's, so that it may safely be calculated that he will have many years of prominence among the tennis players of the world, if not always of absolute leadership among them all. He has earned his position fairly and squarely. The part of the American public which is interested in tennis or in athletic supremacy of any kind will not fail to give him credit for first-rate performance.

A tourist said he found the best road in his experience between Richmond and Newport, and one of the worst bits of road between Burlington and Montpelier, although the going most of the way was good. This comment shows the need of striking an average in this work, not by pulling down the condition of the first named highway, but by improving the conditions over the much used route between the capital and the metropolis of Vermont.

A bad spot in any highway goes far to counteract the benefits of the excellent work done along the road as a whole, and the county superintendents should go over this route and see where the surface has given away under the tremendous strain and wear of the tourist period.—Burlington Free Press.

Those in this vicinity who have traveled over the highway from Montpelier to Burlington will coincide in their views with the tourist mentioned by the contemporary; the route across the state from the capital city to the largest city is the worst to be found outside the back pastures of Vermont. And The Times coincides with the contemporary that this road ought to be made over and without further delay, but it would suggest that the trouble is not due to the fact that the "surface has given away under the tremendous strain," because in many places there never has been a surface to give way under the strain; it is, as always it has been, a desert of sand which the natives have labored through for scores and scores of years without thought of bettering the conditions. It is time to surface the road all the way just as it is, for instance, through the greater part of the town of Waterbury.

CURRENT COMMENT

A New Foreign Trade Record.

Statistics of the foreign trade of the United States continue to confound the political orators who said that our commerce with other nations was hampered by the protective tariff. That tariff still is in force, and in the last fiscal year, ending July 31, the country's foreign trade made its highest record. Imports for July were slightly less than in the same month last year, but the total of imports and exports was the largest ever reported. The figures compiled by the department of commerce are impressive. Imports last month amounted to $139,281,277, as compared with $148,666,738 in July, 1912. In the seven months ending with July they were $1,618,802,132, against $1,033,318,464 in the same months of last year, and for the 12 months ending with July they were $18,303,622, 723, as compared with $1,683,577,468 in 1912.

Notwithstanding the increase in imports, the excess of exports over imports for the year was $673,892,012. Last month the exports amounted to $160,515,941, against $148,885,355 in July, 1912, and for the seven months ending with July they amounted to $1,326,785,300, as compared with $1,248,501,558 in the same period last year. The value of exports for the entire year was $2,477,514,735, against $2,225,510,810 in 1912.

Probably a new tariff law will be in operation before many weeks have passed. The "shackles" are to be cast off, and presently there will be opportunity to make interesting comparisons with respect to statistics of the foreign trade.—Rutland Herald.

Thaw's Talkativeness.

The newspaper men at Sherbrooke, working out their assignments on the Thaw case, have rendered the country a service of no slight importance in sending out Thaw's rambling and self-complacent utterances. There could be no stronger proof that he is a paranoiac, whose fit place is the asylum for the insane at Mattewan. It is easy to be naive that he is, a source of no small annoyance as well as revenue to the lawyers engaged to look after his interests. He will not follow their advice, when it is of the utmost importance to himself to do so. He persists in outgivings which can in no way help his case, and much of which has little if any bearing upon it. If there could be an end of his case, so far as the courts and the public are concerned, it would be a positive relief to know that he was back at Mattewan, with the faith in him as a "trustee" dispelled for good and all, and with special privileges removed. That his return to Mattewan will see an end to attempts to secure his liberty is too much to hope, while the Thaw millions last and his mother and sister live, but there does not appear to be any other proper or possible outcome of his flight and recapture. It would be an outrage of justice if he should be permitted to go free so long as he was able to resist the temptation to return to the state of New York, and it would not be in accordance with a reasonable regard for the safety of the public. When the Canadian government decides upon his deportation, and the order is carried out, it is to be hoped that the governor of whatever state he is taken to will promptly turn him over to the New York authorities, by whom he will in turn be recommended to the asylum at Mattewan. He can never again be tried for the murder which he has already committed, but he should be deprived of all opportunity to commit another. He is not a safe man to be at large.—Manchester (N. H.) Union.

The Coming Paper.

The modern newspaper is credited with being a wonderful thing, bringing as it does all the news of the world to its readers within a very short time after it happens. It is not alone the large cities that are favored, for some news is kept in the papers of the small towns. It is to be hoped that the modern newspaper will be used for distributing the paper of the future, so that the place now occupied by the country paper will be taken by the city paper because of the improved methods of transportation. He thinks that morning and evening editions will be merged so that editions will come out almost every hour of the day and night.

In the new gathering field marvelous improvements will be made. News will be collected by wireless and a reporter will always have a portable telephone with him so that he may ever be in communication with his office. And what changes in the news reading fields. Perhaps people will even refuse to read the paper so easy will it be to get the information in an easier way. At recreation halls all the news of the day will be given out from its source by some agreeable instrument of mechanism. In the home news will be brought in as the gas and water are now and your lazy man will have only to press the button and listen to what is happening.

It is an interesting picture that Mr. Donald draws and makes it will be possible from the mechanical viewpoint. But what of the expense? If the paper is eliminated and people get their news from recreation halls or home services, won't the expense be prohibitive for the man in the street? It is a well known fact that advertising supplies the money in the newspaper shop. How is the advertising to be done? Will men listen to the sporting of the prices of meat and underwear? Not much. When the advertising section would come along they would take a little nap and wait for the news.

This is the main reason why the London editor's dream will never materialize to any popular extent. There must always be advertising mediums, for the people who want to buy, want to see what is offered and those who have things to sell want to make known their offerings. Advertising is as important a part of trade as any other factor and it can't be wiped out. Undoubtedly the newspaper will be vastly improved as the years go on, but it will still be printed and read as now. And people like to know what is going on locally and the monster city paper will not crowd out the country daily which is giving the home news and home advertising.—St. Albans Messenger.

RACES AT MIDDLEBURY.

Fair Opened Under Poor Weather Conditions—There Are Big Exhibits.

Middlebury, Aug. 27.—The 60th annual fair of the Addison County Agricultural society opened here yesterday. The weather was bleak and unpropitious and there were light showers at intervals. The forenoon was devoted to entering and arranging of exhibits, which did not close until 6 o'clock. There are large entries in the livestock and poultry departments, and much pains are being taken with horticultural and floral exhibits. The fair is held in the county which will make their displays for prizes. In exhibition hall, which is peculiarly the ladies' home during the fair, an immense number of entries have been made, so many that the officials have not yet had time to arrange them in proper order. Owing to bad weather the arrival and arrangement of the exhibits could not be completed last night. The village authorities have been hauling for several weeks past to get the streets in excellent shape, and the main streets are now oiled by an improved process, while the "waterproof" track on the grounds is in the pink of condition. A few drops of rain fell during the forenoon, but not enough to hinder the business in hand. From long experience, the association has seen fit to provide that exhibitors in exhibition hall and horticultural hall may have their lists made out in the halls with the exhibits, no call at Secretary F. C. Dyer's office being necessary for this detail.

Governor Allen M. Fletcher will honor the fair with his presence on Thursday.

To-day's program will include the exhibition of matched and single drivers at 10 o'clock and the judges began looking over the exhibits at 9 with the view to awarding premiums. The afternoon will include the 2:30 trot with 17 entries, purse $300, the 2:20 trot with 17 entries, and the 2:26 trot with 27 entries, purse $500. The races yesterday resulted as follows:

RAIN SPOILED RACES.

Morrisville Fair Ran Into Bad Weather Yesterday.

Morrisville, Aug. 27.—The opening day of the 40th annual Lamolille valley fair was somewhat dampened by showers. Beginning in the morning the rain poured so incessantly that it was impossible to carry out any of the special program, except the ball game between Morrisville and the Logan Squares of Montpelier. In spite of the unfavorable weather conditions, there was a good crowd of attendants. The program for yesterday will be dovetailed into that of to-day and Thursday, thus adding to the features yet to come. Amos R., the guileless wonder, with a mark of 1:00½ for the half mile, will race Wednesday and Thursday.

At the Floral hall, the management is fairly swamped with exhibits. An added feature in this line is the complete and scientific exhibit by the state agricultural college of Burlington. Never were so many race horses entered. Their number now exceeds 60.

Three gambling joints on the grounds were spotted and stopped early yesterday morning by Officer Towne. The fair ground company has signified its intention of putting forth every effort to clean out all such places and make the biggest, best and cleanest fair in the history of Lamolille valley.

The races to-day will include the 2:40 class, which will be run in two sections, there being nine starters in one and eight in the others, and the 2:30 and the 2:14 classes.
